Step 6 of 7 - Sales Information

Full Member dues are based on U.S. sales of “aerospace systems,” which include products incorporated into aerospace systems, products necessary for the operation of aerospace systems, services unique to the production or operation of aerospace systems, products or services designed or intended to protect aerospace systems from cyber-attacks, and Homeland Security products or services for use with aerospace systems, and shall include all domestic commercial sales, export sales, and sales under government contracts.

Definition of U.S. Aerospace Sales for Purpose of Calculating Dues

The definition of U.S. aerospace sales also includes funds derived from design proposals, study contracts to establish conceptual or technical feasibility, research and development (whether or not manufacture of hardware is involved), test and evaluation, production, installation, training, maintenance, and modification.

A member company may voluntarily include its U.S. non-aerospace defense sales for the purpose of calculating dues to maintain a seat on the Executive Committee (ExCom) of the AIA Board of Directors.

For all full member companies reporting revenues of $1 billion or greater, a $35,000 air show assessment will be added to the dues invoice. Please see the Terms section of this application for more information on the air show assessment.

Sales figures are required in order to determine membership dues. All information will be held in strict confidence by AIA. If N/A please provide an explanation.

Please provide the gross sales of U.S. aerospace products and/or services by year for 2021 and 2022:

Terms

*The computation of Regular Member dues shall be based on the sales of “aerospace systems” as it is defined above in the membership eligibility section and shall include all domestic commercial sales, export sales, and sales under Government contracts. The foregoing includes funds derived from design proposals, study contracts to establish conceptual or technical feasibility, research and development (whether or not manufacture of hardware is involved), test and evaluation, production, installation, training, maintenance, and modification.

 Dues payments to the Aerospace Industries Association are not deductible as charitable contributions for federal income tax purposes. They are, however, deductible as an ordinary and necessary business expense, subject to the following limitation. As a result of the 1993 Revenue Reconciliation Act P.L. 103-66, expenses paid or incurred by a trade association for lobbying activities are not deductible for federal income tax purposes after December 1, 1993. AIA estimates that 14% of your 2024 dues are non-deductible as a result of AIA lobbying activities.

 Regular and Associate Members shall be required to inform the AIA Membership office in writing (e-mail acceptable) by October 30, if the Member does not wish to renew its membership in AIA for the forthcoming Calendar Year. Failure to provide such notice of non-renewal by the identified date certain shall cause automatic renewal of membership for the forthcoming year, and the Member to be liable for the full amount of the applicable annual dues. On an annual basis, AIA staff shall inform each Member in writing (e-mail acceptable) of this requirement at least thirty (30) days in advance of October 30 for notice of non-renewal.

* AIA’s Board of Governors approved a ‘Trade Show Assessment’ that is applied to those member companies with self-reported aerospace and defense sales over $1 billion. These funds go directly toward operation center costs and aircraft corral associated costs for equipment and crew, thereby ensuring that AIA’s trade promotion efforts are to the benefit of the broader industry and not for the specific gain of a single company. AIA’s authority to promote the U.S. A&D industry is underpinned by special status certified by the U.S. Government. The assessment fees are NOT used towards events taking place in conjunction with AIA’s presence at these shows. Additional needed funds are provided directly from the manufacturers of the equipment to support specific platforms that participate in these air shows. AIA members meeting the sales threshold of over $1 billion agree to remit this assessment along with their dues payment via their annual dues invoice.
